

Weekly Work Memo
October 29- November 2, 2012

Timothy Sandole
Belfer Center Associate/Campus Wikipedian

Monday, January 14

- Spent the day drafting 'Cold Start,' the Indian military doctrine, for Wikipedia on MS Word while simultaneously opening up more research on 'selective engagement' vs. 'primacy' in U.S. grand strategy; a debate that rekindled in the pages of Foreign Affairs and International Security in the New Year (8 hours).

Tuesday, January 15

- Completed 'Cold Start' draft. Sent draft to Belfer Center Director of Communications Jim Smith for review. Opened up research on 'The Evolution of Nuclear Strategy' by Lawrence Summers (8 hours).

Wednesday, January 16

- HTML coded and authored the Cold Start Wikipedia page, which can be found here: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cold_Start_%28military_doctrine%29#Origins. Contributed over 6,000 bytes (3 hours).
- Continued U.S. grand strategy research (5 hours).

Thursday, January 17

- After consulting with him, research assistant Andrew Wojtanik created his own Wikipedia username Wojtanik (AndrewWojtanik) and drafted his first international security-related Wikipedia page, which can be found here: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mokhtar_Belmokhtar. It has since been modified by other Wikipedians (3 hours).
- Starting reading 'The World America Made' by Robert Kagan to compliment U.S. grand strategy research (5 hours).

Friday, January 18

1. Continued research history of nuclear strategy. Started drafting early history of nuclear strategy Wiki on MS word (8 hours).